A. B. FORBES, General Agent for the Pacific coast, 214 Sansome street, San Francisco.

ADVANTAGES:

Its premium rates are lowest.

Its security unequaled.

Its ample cash assets are securely invested.

It gives certain and reliable insurance at lowest rates.

Its policies, simple in form, fair and liberal in terms, contain a specific guarantee of paid up insurance.

Its large dividends, declared annually, are not withheld from policy holders, but can be used as cash in paying premiums.

It is a strictly mutual company; no stockholders, but all profits are equitably divided among its policy holders, there being no preferred class.

Its expenses are lowest, and the investment of its funds and all its business interests are managed with prudence, safety and economy.

It denies legitimate Life and Endowment Insurance only, and does not issue Tontine policies.

A WIDESPREAD EVIL.

[illegible] Many [illegible] adulterated [illegible] are quite harmless [illegible] new [illegible] in [illegible] with those who pursue this course [illegible] to undersell others who furnish what [illegible] to furnish and nothing less. In general [illegible] retail dealer buys the article [illegible] market, and of course is not [illegible] for the diminution of its value by [illegible] of a cheaper commodity with it. Yet [illegible] retail dealer usually receives the [illegible] were the [illegible] In New York not long ago there were certain [illegible] of the extent to which the vice of adulteration of food articles is carried on in that city. These exposures promised to be startling, but some individuals of prominence were procured to sign their names to certificates that the adulterations were not so injurious nor so extensive as had been alleged. Apprehension may be quieted in this way, yet every well-informed reader, with some experience in the way in which apparently trifling items of expenditure foot up in manufactures, and with ordinary knowledge of the price of manufactured articles and raw materials, must be aware that half the truth had not been told. Since the little flurry created by the New York and Chicago newspapers subsided the question has not been agitated very extensively and there seems to be a settled and growing feeling of security on the part of those who are making great sums of money by constant "improvement" in the practice of adulterating articles of food and drink.

Even the most valuable articles of this class are usually put up in handsome and sometimes showy packages. They appear well to the eye, and the economical customer who buys them fancies he has obtained a bargain, when the truth is he has paid for so much of the real article as he has purchased, a very high price—perhaps nearly double the actual value. He has paid full prices for manufacturing, for making up, for labels, packages and freight, and has only saved the difference in value between a quantity of useless adulteration in the purchase and a similar quantity of the genuine article. The rich do not suffer so much in this way; they buy the best and pay the prices demanded. The poor buy the cheapest and pay the dearest. The reputable manufacturer is usually ashamed to put his name on any particularly vile adulteration, and the absence of such name or its equivalent ought to put the consumer on his guard.

BARRIERS TO SUCCESS.

Standing in the pathway that leads to success in life, the two great barriers against the progress of man, are indecision and want of energy. "Have an aim in life," says one, "and pursue it through thick and thin." Looking in at a thousand doors any one of which would lead to fortune, and taking none of them will always keep a man poor. A few years of this listless way of living unnerves a man. Once allow the spirit to become thoroughly subdued and it were almost as easy to wake the dead as to rouse in the bosom the sense of manhood. A few days ago a gentleman told the following story, which we will use for the purpose of illustrating our point: "Not long since a man called at our door," says the narrator, "and asked for something to eat. He was the first of the genus tramp we have ever had the opportunity to speak to and we determined to profit by it. He was invited into the library, given a chair and questioned generally about his mode of life and his prospects. We found him to have average intelligence; had been disappointed in his efforts at some time, and had given up all hope of ever doing anything for himself. "Do you ever expect to have a home?" "No." "Would you not try?" "There are too many difficulties in the way." "But the government gives lands to those who will occupy and improve them." "I have nothing to begin with." "There is plenty of government land in these mountains with as good ranches as any that have been taken." "The wood on the land only needs to be marketed." "Have no wagon and horses." "But it would sell on the ground if it were cut." "Have no ax." "But you can work." "Yes." "Well, work—work at any price, get a little money; buy tools to begin with—an ax and a mattock. You are a full grown man, have average intelligence, and can do for yourself what other people have done for themselves. Manage to buy a stand of bees, and take care of them, and their numbers would increase. Buy a few chickens, and the eggs would pay for provisions." "But wages are so low." "Better work at any price than beg." "Times are hard for those who employ labor as well as for those who seek employment. When barley sells at 60 cents a sack, farmers cannot pay high prices. But how much are you making now?" "O, not anything." Well, do you not see that if you had been getting a dollar or even fifty cents a day for the last two or three months, you would have been better off to-day?" Then he was told of a plucky man near by (and there are plenty of them within a day's ride of Portland), who commenced with absolutely nothing but a strong will, built a tent and commenced to make himself a home. That man would scorn to be dependent. He would die before he would ask anyone to help him. But he has helped himself, by his energy and determination. But these poor men, such as he, have not; and therein lies the cause of nearly all the tramping. They do not belong to the laboring classes, for they do not labor. The workingmen are not to be charged with them; but they doubtless have more sympathy with them than others, for they know how hard it is to obtain employment, and how exceedingly discouraging it is to receive only half a day's pay for a whole day's work. It is breaking to the spirit of a man to know that he has worked hard for a whole year and is no richer at the end than at the beginning. But we would say to them cultivate hope. Cultivate energy and determination. Drive away from you the devil of indecision. It will cost labor. It will cost hard and painful struggles. But you will be the better and stronger for having struggled. Take one of the roads to fortune and except to note your progress never look back.

Thurlow Weed was a great editor in an era when an editor who aspired to distinction was expected to be a skillful political manager. [illegible] among our politicians [illegible] than Mr. Weed was in his best days. He is the last of the noted [illegible] Born in 1797 he [illegible] in which he excelled all other men [illegible] war of 1812 [illegible]

[illegible] President Arthur will [illegible]

WHAT IT COSTS TO LIVE.

[illegible] and the [illegible] is the whole, the [illegible] other places [illegible] the cost of living [illegible] Portland will never again be [illegible] as it has been. All classes will feel this and perhaps the middle class [illegible] more than any other.

The same acts apply to all our cities. They are not confined to the great cities of the Atlantic slope, but extend to all the newer cities of the west. It is a result quite to be expected, because the further a community advances [illegible] from the simplicity of rural towards the complexity of urban life the more it must actually pay for supply both of natural and artificial wants. A St. Paul paper before us estimates the cost of living in that city is on the whole twenty-five per cent in advance of the [illegible] years ago, and is still going up. Experience in other cities goes to show that the top scale of prices in the cost of living has not been reached in Portland, considerable as the advance has been within the last two or three years.

As all names mean something and owe their origin to something, there have been countless speculations as to the origin of the name of Shakespeare. Most have inclined to the opinion that the name comes from some warrior who wielded a mighty spear in the days of feudal chivalry. But now comes a writer in a Boston journal who insists on settling the question "in the light of common sense." An ancestor of the great poet, when surnames were adopted, became known through some kind of incident or accident as Shake or Shakes. His particular designation was, suppose, William, or John, which name was also given to his son. As the son grew up, to the father's name was added the word pere, meaning father, to distinguish him from Shakes fils; and the father accepted the addition, preferring it to that hackneyed curtailment, "Sr." Shakes was not a very good name anyhow; probably the boys around town, or even more likely the girls, made fun of it; so Bill or Jack, Jr., decided that the designation accepted by his father was better than the old squib title and when the old man died he appropriated it to himself, whence it descended to the great poet. In all this there isn't much dignity or learning; and yet questions which have puzzled scholars and given rise to no end of discussion, have, after all, been solved by simpler explanations.

The opening article in Harper's for December, just received, is on the Columbia river, written and illustrated by Capt. Cleveland Rockwell. Of the many articles about Oregon and Washington printed in the east this season this is the one best calculated to attract wide attention. Capt. Rockwell has told a great deal about the Columbia river in a very practical way and with admirable brevity. In an article of fourteen pages, a quarter of whose space is taken up by pictures, he has glanced at the region which the Columbia drains, described the river and its great tributaries, given full descriptions of the adjoining country and of the striking views, shown the amount and value of our grain production and of the salmon business, without interesting statement of methods, and treated of a great variety of other matters. But the greatest value of the article is in its illustrations. They are twelve in number and comprise sketches of all of Capt. Rockwell's famous Columbia river pictures with other views. Harper's has never presented a set of pictures more striking in subject or artistic in execution.

The true name of the nickel-plate road, of which we hear so much through the telegraphic reports, is the New York, Chicago and St. Louis. The manner in which it received its popular nickname is explained as follows: "While the road was being built, a western newspaper editor went over the completed portion with Mr. Howard, one of the contractors. The editor noticed the bright steel rails and said they looked as if they were nickel-plated, Mr. Howard laughingly responded that they were. This answer the editor accepted as in earnest, and in describing his trip over the road stated that the rails were nickel-plated. This was soon taken up by the other papers and the road has been given a name which it will always carry.

In an address at New York, delivered since the elections, David A. Wells said: "New England is ready for material reductions in the tariff and the defeat of Mr. Hoar in Massachusetts by the help of manufacturers' votes is significant of the change of sentiment on protection. Foreseeing what is ahead, the Pennsylvania protectionists are in favor of the reduction of internal taxation to the amount of over a hundred millions." He believed that "the moment the ring of protection is broken, and the duty on copper and Bessemer steel is reduced, then the opposition to a change in the tariff would cease.

Production of coal in England in an area about the size of Ohio and with half the population of the United States, is double that of this country. But this country is yet in the infancy of its coal development. There are hardly figures enough to compute its capacity in this respect, and its production for generations to come will depend upon the demand. American manufacturing industries depend on coal, and in this respect there can be no failure. There are several states in which the deposits have been barely touched, equal to the whole of England as coal states.

The Canadian Pacific railway received in aid of its enterprise of extending a steel track from the Atlantic to the Pacific a land grant from the dominion government of 25,000,000 acres. Of this, between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 acres have been sold. The remainder is for sale, and a company has been formed for the purchase of from 11,000,000 to 12,000,000 acres of it, paying in bonds of the Canadian Pacific railway, for which the land company agrees to pay ten per cent. above par.

The governor-elect of Pennsylvania, Robert E. Pattison, is but thirty-two years old. He is the son of a Methodist preacher, is a lawyer by profession, and has been in political life about seven years. He is a native of Maryland, and one of the curious facts about Pennsylvania politics is that he is the first man not a native of the state who was ever elected governor of it.

The total tonnage of the merchant service in Germany increased from 1876 to 1880 to 2,571 [illegible] tons. The augmentation under sail [illegible] vessels is set down at 38,531 tons only, while the expansion under steam has been less than 2,536,29[illegible] tons.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS.

[illegible] advertisements, as [illegible] we have now reached such a number of [illegible] that for the convenience [illegible] it has become necessary to classify them. [illegible] The advertisement of this class [illegible] under proper headings, [illegible] advertisers [illegible] All the information [illegible] is contained in the advertisements [illegible] This journal serves as a bureau of information [illegible] of which it has a circulation.

CITY.

[illegible] LOST DOG.—Several weeks ago [illegible] Hughes, of a valuable [illegible] setter dog. He advertised the animal [illegible] the conclusion that it was lost for good [illegible] he received a message from [illegible] the Columbia, informing him that a dog answering to the description had been seen in the possession of [illegible] whose scow was located on [illegible] near Swan Island. Mr. Hughes started immediately [illegible] in an open boat for many miles [illegible] many vicissitudes he at last found [illegible] sought and the floating home of the [illegible] The dog had been sold to [illegible] for a season and as they were [illegible] and knew how to use them they [illegible] to enter into any extended explanation [illegible] allowed Johnny to take his dog with [illegible] and he departed. He will keep a [illegible] on his favorite in future.

THE TAX LAW.—The law passed by the last [illegible] in regard to taxing mortgages has had [illegible] different effect from what its framers intended. [illegible] of interest on money has advanced one [illegible] and any person desiring a loan has to [illegible] to offer before he can obtain [illegible] The attorneys of the principal banking [illegible] of this city are engaged in considering [illegible] of the law as it is probable [illegible] be allowed to be invalid or [illegible] to make loans to the natives of non-[illegible] The law, it is understood, was framed in [illegible] of certain counties in which large [illegible] of foreign capital have been loaned, and its [illegible] it appears, must work serious damage [illegible] as the tax-payers are allowed to deduct [illegible] to non-residents from the [illegible] of their taxable property, and there appears [illegible] way of collecting the tax from the non-resident [illegible] holds the security.

[illegible] A FALL WAS THERE.—As a venerable [illegible] with a remarkably dignified and [illegible] cast of countenance, was ascending [illegible] leading to the Chinese temple of [illegible] evening in order that he might spend [illegible] hours in witnessing a rendition of [illegible] of the Celestial Sinkers [illegible] he met with an unexpected and painful [illegible] He had ascended within one step of the [illegible] on the stairs and was just [illegible] it open when a party descending the [illegible] with a vigorous push, striking the [illegible] on the nasal organ with sufficient force [illegible] him over backward. All Oregonian [illegible] happened to be passing at the time and [illegible] thoroughly versed in Mandarin Chinese, [illegible] translation of the explanation [illegible] but for obvious reasons deemed it [illegible] a thick and dark veil over the scene.

[illegible] ARRESTS.—Some time since George Price, [illegible] but not favorably known in this city, [illegible] as an authorized deputy sheriff from [illegible] county in search of a person charged with [illegible] On Tuesday evening he brought two [illegible] from Lonesville, Douglas county, with [illegible] to the care of Sheriff Sears, [illegible] one of them, called Miller, is guilty [illegible] and the other, called "Yankee Charlie," [illegible] The parties assert that the [illegible] complain of the manner in which they [illegible] treated by Price since their arrest, stating [illegible] has made an exhibition [illegible] visited the jail yesterday, but was [illegible] that he was not allowed to see the [illegible] has telegraphed to [illegible] the matter, and will hold the prisoners [illegible] gets an answer.

[illegible] OF IT.—In publishing the state[illegible] yesterday concerning the application [illegible] of Mr. Ellis G. Hughes from the attorney [illegible] of the Columbia Railway Company, the remark [illegible] that there were at least two sides to every [illegible] and what was given the was the lighter [illegible] of it. Further inquiry on the [illegible] the statement from this quarter that the [illegible] of the case is very different. It is stated that [illegible] the application for his removal [illegible] mismanagement of the case by Mr. [illegible] in his individual interest in the litigation [illegible] the reasons have been submitted to [illegible] court and are now under consideration [illegible] Mr. Robertson considers it not [illegible] to the courts to make further presentation [illegible] the public at this time.

[illegible] WANTS EATEN.—Seeing the caterer [illegible] known establishment in this city admiring [illegible] of a bear displayed in front of a [illegible] yesterday an Oregonian reporter asked [illegible] purchased any of the delicacy for his [illegible] said he had ordered a piece, but it [illegible] reserved for five or six weeks. By ex[illegible] saying that it would be necessary to bury [illegible] that length of time before it would be [illegible] Probably the man knew, but the average [illegible] would be inclined to let the bear [illegible] the ground after it had been there for six [illegible]

[illegible] ACCIDENT.—Yesterday afternoon a [illegible] from Troutdale brought information to [illegible] that a man employed in stringing [illegible] wire in that vicinity had fallen from a [illegible] down an embankment and broken [illegible] and that the body would be sent to [illegible] depot here at 8 o'clock last evening. Mr. [illegible] at the depot at that time to receive the [illegible] waited there till 10:30 at which time [illegible] had not arrived he returned home. The [illegible] was a member of Mr. Enright's force, [illegible] it can be ascertained was named Crowey.

[illegible] ROAD TAX.—Judge Deady, in the [illegible] circuit court, yesterday granted a per[illegible] restraining Geo. C. Sears, sheriff [illegible] county, and Nelson F. Rose, super[illegible] District No. 8, from collecting road tax [illegible] Chinese who were at work in Rooster Rock [illegible] the O. R. & N. Co.'s line last April. The [illegible] based on the fact that the Chinese were [illegible] within the meaning of the statute [illegible] to the assessment and collection of [illegible] The full text of the decision will be [illegible] few days.

[illegible] A short time since a [illegible] county, named Grant, was arrested [illegible] of selling liquor without a license, and [illegible] city. On examination it was found [illegible] had a license, but by an error of a [illegible] been depicted as having been issued [illegible] Of course the charge was dis[illegible] this does not entirely satisfy Mr. Grant, [illegible] steps to commence action against [illegible] United States revenue collector, to [illegible] on account of being wrongfully ar[illegible]

[illegible] BRIDGET CASE.—The case of [illegible] charged with attempting to [illegible] in the circuit court yesterday. A [illegible] counsel for the defence [illegible] overruled, but the motion was [illegible] Counsel then demurred to the [illegible] The court fixed this morning [illegible] argument on the demurrer. What name is there to ask, or need?
Paul [illegible]

FOR ADOPTION—A BABY.

Returning from a business trip, I entered my wife's room, and found her kneeling before a low chair, on which sat a tiny baby with large, round and wondering eyes. She got up and came rustling in her silken robe de chambre to meet me. She reached out her hand and greeted me not more heartily nor yet more formerly than we were accustomed to greet each other in those days.

"There it is," said my wife, pointing to the child.

"What?" asked I; but she stooped down before the little stranger, held a biscuit close to his little upturned face, and half-turning toward me replied:

"Well, you know what we not read of it in the newspaper? Don't you remember—the day before yesterday? And is it not beautiful?"

Now I do recollect that a few nights before she had held the Gazette under the light of my student lamp, and pointing with her finger to an advertisement, said to me:

"Please read that!"

It was the well-known appeal, the cry of despair from a bleeding heart, addressed to "good people." A child was offered for adoption to people well off.

"What would you think of our taking it?" my wife had said, and I had returned the paper with a shrug of my shoulders.

"But, Martha, what have you done?" cried I, in a tone vibrating with anger. "You have really—"

"Certainly, as you see. And now it belongs to me. I, myself, have settled everything with its poor mother, who is in reality to be pitied. I have sworn to take good care of it; and I will, indeed."

She took the little head, with its blonde silk curls between her white hands, and fondled and caressed it.

"Is it not so, little one—you will be loved?"

But the somewhat sickly and delicate little face showed no signs of understanding, except that out of the heart-shaped little mouth came one of those sighs that sound so strangely from children.

I at once gave up all serious objections. Had we not been accustomed for years to act independently of each other? Our marriage was not a happy one, although we had not married for love. During the noise and bustle of the crowded exchange our fathers had contracted this union. She had to tear her heart from a loved one, and mine glowed a passion not yet outspoken. But paternal wishes conquered and so it happened.

At the commencement we were to each other a silent reproach; after which followed a declared war, until finally we came to a [illegible] but gloomy peace.

To be sure she was beautiful; she was good and bright and sparkling. Others called her an angel. And I? Well, I believe I was no monster, either. The analysis showed the brightest colors; still the sun was missing. We were six years married and had no children. Perhaps had heaven sent us them—well, this child belongs entirely to her! I heard later that she had given the mother a thousand dollars, the price of a set of jewels which she had sold secretly.

"Why did you not tell me of it?" said I, half angrily.

"Because it would have been too late. I had waited for your return to the city; and besides I wanted to have it entirely for myself; I want to call it my own," said she, pointedly.

My horses, my dogs, her canaries, her goldfishes—that I could endure, but that she wanted to have her child for herself alone that was too much for me. The thought of it tortured me one, two days long. On the third day, my wife having gone out in her carriage, there came a veiled woman and demanded entrance. It was the mother. Like a shadow she glided into the room, and with a half suppressed sob, she begged to see her child once more. She could not part from him forever without imprinting one more kiss upon his cheek. I opened my safe quickly.

"Here my good woman," said I, "take that, they have not given you enough."

Hot tears fell down her wan cheeks; she begged me not to judge her too harshly; she herself was sick and would not live much longer, and what was to become of the children? Then she thought—I myself had finished the sentence, which a violent fit of coughing had interrupted.

"Yes," she had thought, "I will sell the healthy one in order that the money may help the cripple when I am dead and gone."

No, she must not be judged harshly; we rich ones know but little of the trials and temptations of the poor.

When my wife returned I gave her an account of the call I had had, adding that I had given to the unfortunate one exactly the same amount as she had.

"And now," said I, "you see the child belongs to both of us."

She bit her lip with her little white teeth.

"It is all the same to me," said she after a moment's reflection, and with that she pressed a tender kiss on the little boy's mouth. It sounded almost like a challenge.

"Our child!" I scarcely ever saw it. And the changes that were made in our household for his sake were made entirely without me. Sometimes, after the most important things were decided, my consent was then asked.

"We are obliged to have a nurse; I hired one, Anselm."

I nodded silently.

"We must fit up a nursery; that room is too warm for the child."

I nodded silently, but I heard the sound of workmen who were already busy in the hall. What could I do better? Was it not a [illegible] for our child?

My wife and I did not talk much about the child, and when we did mention it we used only the name of "It." But this "It" could be heard through the house at almost any time of day.

"Hush! not so much! It sleeps. I must have its dinner! It has hurt itself!" And so the whole house began to turn round one "It." This nameless one vexed me.

"It must have its own name," said I one day.

"I entirely forgot to ask its mother—" meant the woman—"what its name is," answered my wife. "She intended to come again. But she does not come; she is certainly sick. Now, I call it Max. Max is a pretty, short name; is it not?"

"Hem," returned I, between two draughts of my cigar. "Fritz would also be quite a pretty name."

"One cannot change the name now, on account of the domestics," answered she shortly, and then called out loudly: "Is Max up already?"

Never mind, was it not our child?

Once, though, I played my justifiable part toward our child. At dinner it was always served at a little table in an adjoining room. At such times we could hear, between the scantily dropping phrases of our conversation, its merry prattling accompanied by the clattering of its spoon. My wife had no rest; there was a continued going and coming between us and him; the soup might be too hot, and perhaps he might eat too much?

"Wife," said I, very quietly but very decidedly, "from to-morrow it shall eat with us at our table. It is old enough now, with its two years."

From that time on "It" ate with us. It sat there in a high chair like a prince, close to my wife; both opposite to me, like declared enemies, as it were. The yellowish paleness of poverty had yielded to fine aristocratic pink in his little cheeks, which now became quite chubby, sat comfortably on the [illegible] the napkin. It worked powerfully at its soup and now that it had finished, set up [illegible] [illegible] in its little [illegible] My wife and I had exchanged a few words [illegible] we sat all [illegible] Apparently [illegible]

all the same. [illegible]

[illegible] conversation [illegible] [illegible] And [illegible] converse [illegible] carnival prattlings of [illegible] little one [illegible]

[illegible] lisped and broken slightly, indeed, sometimes there was outright laughter at his attempts to speak.

Ah, how [illegible] how [illegible] her [illegible] [illegible] I was the [illegible] that I [illegible] and what was the [illegible] [illegible] sometimes [illegible] [illegible] from a distance [illegible] silvery tinkle!

[illegible] in the garden, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] Now she would playfully reach him and [illegible] [illegible] fluttering sparrows [illegible] [illegible] with the [illegible] she would [illegible] and kiss [illegible] and over. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] around me [illegible] [illegible] then she found out of a green vine [illegible] bower, [illegible] was dressed in a dazzling white [illegible] the [illegible] with [illegible] face all except [illegible] streamed the golden sunshine, except that [illegible] face was overshadowed by the [illegible] of her [illegible]

How slim she appeared; how graceful in movement! Had I been blinded? Truly [illegible] aunt and cousins were right; she was [illegible] beautiful! A sweet smile transformed her features, she was happy, certainly in this moment she was—and her happiness came from the child. Then a voice made itself heard in my breast, which said very plainly: "You are a monster!" I got up and walked to the window. "It is a beautiful day," called I. I know how cold and prosaic it must have sounded to her. It came like a heavy cloud shadow over a sunny landscape. She answered something that I did not understand; but the brightness was gone from her little face. Then she took up the child, who was stretching out its arms to her and kissed him and caressed him before my eyes.

There it was when the first feeling of jealousy was aroused in me; a jealousy, truly, but what a strange jealousy, which could not make clear itself who was its object. If "It" had "mamma" to her, there came a pain in the heart, and the caresses with which she overwhelmed him almost drove me wild. I was jealous of both. It pained me that I had no part in the weaving of love; that I was not a third in the union. I exerted myself to gain a part of their love. I did it very clumsily. The child persevered in a certain shyness, and she, had I not kept myself forcibly away from her during these long, long years?

One day at the dinner table, after a skirmish of words, came a great stillness between us, a stillness more painful than it had ever been. I glanced down at the flowers on my plate of Saxon porcelain, my displeasure showing in my face; but I felt plainly that "It" had its eyes fixed on me, and also her eyes. It was as if those four eyes burned on my forehead. Then [illegible] in the stillness: "Papa!" and again, louder and more courageous: "Papa!" I shuddered. It sat there and stared, now very much frightened, over at me, wondering, perhaps, what sort of a storm would be raised by its "papa." But her face was now suffused with glowing redness, and her half open lips trembled slightly.

There came a flood of gladness over my heart. Certainly no one but she had taught him this "Papa." Why did I not spring up, bound toward her, and with one word, one embrace, strike out the loneliness of these last six years? One right word in this moment, and all would have been well. It remained unspoken; I seemed to have lost all my power to act; but on a certain page of my ledger are still traces of the tears I shed in anger at my own stupidity.

There was no doubt about it: another witch had stepped in with its little curly head, the spirit of love; and that made me a stranger in my own house. A precious sunshine brightened the rooms even when the one in the heavens was hidden by clouds. The faces of the servants and even inanimate objects, streamed back their radiance. But me, only the sunshine could not touch.

I felt myself always more and more unhappy in my loneliness. Jealousy grew in me. It gave me all sorts of foolish thoughts. I wanted to rebel against the little autocrat, but that would be ridiculous. I wanted to give her the choice between him and me. I, audacious one, I knew very well which side her heart would choose. At another time I was ready to take steps to find the mother, and, with the power of gold, force her to take back her child behind my wife's back. That would be cowardly.

I could no longer fix my mind on business. I mistreated even myself. People asked me what was the matter with me. I feigned illness.

The sunshine would not let itself be banished, and the spirit of love was stronger than I. With his flaming sword he drove me out.

"I must take a long journey, Martha." My voice trembled as I said this. My wife must have noticed it; for something like moist, shining pity trembled in her beautiful eyes. At my taking leave she held the little one toward me and asked in soft, caressing tones: "Will you not say adieu to our child?" I took up the little one, perhaps too roughly, at all events he began to cry and resist my caresses. Then I put him down and hastened away.

I traveled in uncertainty through the world, and behold! After the first few days in addition to an ordinary traveling companion bad humor, here came another fellow who told me plainly that I was a fool. First it sounded like a whisper, then louder and louder: "You are a downright fool!" Finally I read it in the newspaper before me; it was traced on the blue mountains; the locomotive shrieked it to me. Yes, I believe it; why did I not then and there turn my face homeward? Well, the fool must travel it all before everything would be right again.

At last, one day, with a violent beating of the heart, I again entered my dwelling. What a solemn stillness reigned there! I could not hear the sound of whispering voices: my wife came toward me: "It is very sick, very sick," moaned she; "It will surely die!" I tried to comfort her. Only a short time, however, proved that her fears were but too well grounded. During the night we both sat by the little bed, she there and I here. Each of us held in one of his little hands. Ah! those feverish pulse beats!—each stroke sounding like an admonition: "Love each other, love each other, be good!" We felt eventually these throbbings and we understood the appeal. Our eyes met full and earnest through the glittering tears, as in a first holy vow. Words would have seemed sacrilege then.

Nothing after we had laid our darling in warm spring sand.

When we again sat down at our table, there was a stillness between us; but it was not the same stillness as that which the little stranger had broken in upon its parting: "Papa." Even by the wall still stood its high arm-chair, and on the little board before it lay his spoon scepter. My wife reached her fine, white hand over the table and asked: "Did you also love it?" "At least a little?" Her voice trembled.

"My wife! my sweet, my own wife!" called I. Then I fell at her feet and held her hand fast to mine. "I love thee, my wife! O, my wife!"

After the first emotion had subsided, I pointed to the arm-chair: "The little one came to teach us love," whispered I. "And when it had finished its teaching, it went again to the angels," added she, through her tears.

One day the physician stepped into my office, a [illegible] with a smiling face. He touched the little arm-chair as he passed it, saying: "Let it stand there; you will need it again."

Really? Was it possible? Had I deserved such happiness?

And held my wife close to my heart in my irrepressible joy. I could not forbear to bend down to her blushing little face, and say: "We will love it dearly, very dearly. Is it not so?"

Lightning struck a contribution plate in a western church just as the deacon was passing it around. "This is the first time anything has struck this plate for three months," said the deacon, thoughtfully.—Bos. Globe.

Butler's Election.

Chicago Tribune.

Butler's election as governor of Massachusetts is one of the political anomalies of this year. Eight years ago it was the indiction of what was known as Butlerism that defeated the republicans in that state and throughout the country. Butlerism was the synonym for salary-grabbing, the spoils [illegible] the desperate machine element in the republican party. Popular protest took the form of a democratic victory at that time. But this same man Butler [illegible] has changed in no way except to [illegible] He is elected by the very party which carried the day [illegible] by denouncing him and [illegible] [illegible] is a curious contradiction when [illegible] in this light. It can only be explained [illegible] general dissatisfaction among Massachusetts [illegible] [illegible] with the Arthur administration [illegible] [illegible]
